

Hi Everyone,

This is Hermes, the Greek god of commerce. This statue is in a little alcove in the main lobby of the Commerce Building. Hermes has an interesting story. On the day he was conceived and born he stole the cattle of Apollo. When Apollo went to Zeus complaining about the theft Zeus just laughed. To apologize, Hermes gave Apollo the lyre Hermes had just invented. Hermes helped Odysseus avoid the powers Circes by giving him a magic herb to chew. Circe had turned all of Odysseus's companion's into pigs. Hermes is not only the god of commerce but he also protects shepherds, land travel and athletes among others. He was also the messenger of the gods.

You probably haven't stolen cattle from Apollo or saved heroes from being turned into pigs. But you probably have an interesting story of your own. A story of happy times and not so happy times. I'm sure that bad things have happened to you because bad things happen to good people. I'm equally sure that you have dreams and aspirations you want to see play out. Whatever your situation we're here to help you out. We want you to find your Olympus. Please tell us your story.

Till Next Time,
